Climate, viticulture, winemaking

Situated in the upper Mendoza valley, the vineyards of Luján de Cuyo sit at altitudes of around 1000m, (3280 feet) above sea level. With intense sunlight experienced during the day and cold night temperatures, the wines produced show deep concentration of flavour and structure. The soils are clay/loam.

Hand harvesting at night preserves flavour profiles whilst avoiding the heat of the sun. Fermentation takes place in stainless steel tanks between 26 - 28°C, lasting eight days. Maceration occurs for seven days, before ageing in French oak, of which 50% are new, for six months. Wine spends a further six months in bottle prior to release.

Tasting Notes

Restrained dark berry and ripe plum aromas with incredible depth of flavour on the palate. Round and powerful in structure supported by velvety tannins. Dried fruit and spiced notes combine with hints of cocoa and vanilla on a lingering finish.
