Producer

Cédric Allion owns this small, but bustling estate, overseeing the vineyards and the winemaking himself.

Climate, viticulture, winemaking

The estate is situated in the Cher Valley, a tributary of the river Loire, in the village of Thésée, also called Thésée la Romaine, because it has ruins from the 2nd century Gallo-Roman age. At this time, Thésée was located on one of the main trade routes halfway between Tours and Bourges and was relatively prosperous. The vineyard extends mainly over the slopes of the north bank of the river Cher, with southwest and southeastern exposure. The soil types are clay-limestone and shallow clay-siliceous with the presence of flints and as the slopes are steep, good, natural drainage occurs creating a semi-oceanic climate.

The vines were planted in 1974, once picked, traditional fermentation occurs and three old wine barrels are used for ageing - this occurs between 9 and 11 months. Estate bottled.

Tasting Notes

Lots of dark and red fruit on the nose, blackcurrant, cherries, raspberries. Smooth and powerful palette with notes of liquorice and spiced notes.

Good to know

Cédric owns 5 hectares of certified organic vineyards and follows rigorous sustainable practices within the vineyard and winery including the use of eco-responsible products to promote biodiversity; such as using micro-organisms to rapidly increase the humus content in soil and thus fertility. Water, fuel and energy is used as efficiently and with little impact on the surrounding environment.
