Producer

---

Siblings Sofia and Tomás Groppo Parisi are the second generation to manage the estate and its production.

Climate, viticulture, winemaking

Seeing the growing potential of Patagonian soil and climate, the first vines were planted in 2003 by husband and wife team Carlos and Cristina Groppo Parisi. The family estate stretches 61 hectares with a 300,000 litre cellar. The vineyards itself experience low annual rainfall and frequent and intense winds; forcing the grapes to develop thick skins and establish deep set roots, characterising its wines robust structure.

Soils in San Patricio de Chañar are sandy and gravelly and all vines are fed water from the Andes mountain snowmelt. Grapes are picked manually before 15% of the harvest are gently pressed and macerated as whole bunches while the rest are destemmed. Juice is fermented under controlled temperatures using indigenous yeasts and aged in stainless steel tanks to preserve the natural characteristics of the grape.

Tasting Notes

Aromas of black cherry, raspberry and redcurrants on the nose with a faint hint of cocoa in the background.

Good to know

---

Tomás and his team do not use any synthetic pesticides, fertilisers or additives within the vineyard or winery. They compost all degradable material like discarded pomace, prunings and leaves to add back into the land. They aim to be certified organic for the 2025 harvest.

Vegetarian and vegan friendly.
